

February 2013

February is "National Prevent a Litter Month."

Spaying or neutering pets is a common procedure, and there are significant medical benefits associated with having your pet spayed or neutered. If female pets are spayed before their first heat cycle, the risk of developing mammary tumors (breast cancer) is significantly reduced. Spaying female pets also eliminates the risk of pyometra, an infection of the uterus. This disease can be very serious, even fatal, in female pets.

Male pets can also benefit from the procedure. Neutering eliminates testicular reduces prostate Spaying or ultimately help prolong a pet's life as well. When pets are spayed or neutered, their tendencies to roam or fight are greatly reduced. This helps reduce risks such as pets getting lost, stolen, hit by cars, taken to the animal shelter, or contracting a contagious disease.

We recommend all pet owners have their pets spayed or neutered. The medical advantages have been proven, and it helps control the pet population. These procedures rarely result in complications, and the pets recover from surgery relatively quickly. Please contact us with any questions you may have.
